It's time to explain that slow moderation over the last week has been because I have been on holiday.

Located right on the Scottish border, it has been a glorious week of walks, thinking and reading, plus birdwatching. Blogging apart, very little work has been done, although a colleague did point out that blogging three times a day was not his idea of a holiday.

This morning it's time to pack and go home. I am ignoring the events of the day. After all, we all knew Boris Johnson was a liar, anyway.

So, I leave you with this willow warbler. It may not be the best photo of all time, but they do not pose very often, and this one was near Kielder Water yesterday:
