Time was well spent by the River Cam this morning.

I could have aligned this shot better, but I still like it as a sign of autumn coming:

This picture of yarrow, which most would think of as a weed, appeals to me:

As weeds go that is impressive, I think.

And the heron was the real subject of this shot, but the other side of the river forced me to frame its presence:

All taken at the Kingfisher Bridge reserve, for which I am very grateful as it so regularly provides me with a place to walk, think, restore myself and have a great coffee and cake.
