

Question of the day: When should the general election b...

Published: January 14, 2026, 2:24 am

The UK is in limbo. A demoralised, debased, discredited, and largely defunct government is hanging on in office with what appears to be the sole aim of enriching its cronies for as long as might be possible before the careers of most of those now in office fade into thankful oblivion.

The most important political question of the day is, in that case, when should the general election be held? What do you think?

[poll id="88"]