According to polling by More in Common, most people want a change of government:

Most Britons want a change of government - including Backbone Conservatives

Which comes closest to your view? ● The UK needs a change of government
● The UK does not need a change of government

They also want that change soon:

Most Britons want a General Election by May

From the following options, when do you think the next General Election should be held?

● Before the end of this year ● In the first few months of next year ● Around May next year
● Sometime next Autumn ● January 2025

The appetite for delay only exists amongst older Tory voters.

I am sure Labour would agree with the majority.

That is probably why delay is most likely. I have a strong feeling that Sunak would like at least two years as PM on his CV. I can think of no other reason why he would not want to end the Tory misery as soon as possible.
