Right now, it is quite hard to recall that the biggest crisis facing humanity arises as a result of climate change. Discussion of the issue has been largely crowded out by reports of humanity's inhumanity, whether in Israel and Gaza, or at the Covid inquiry, or in the creation of destitution as a consequence of deliberate government policy. We should not ignore it though, and the difficulty of tackling it. This is the biggest humanitarian crisis of all, just waiting to happen.

So this is the question of the day:
