

Funding the Future

The Tories are planning some serious austerity, startin...

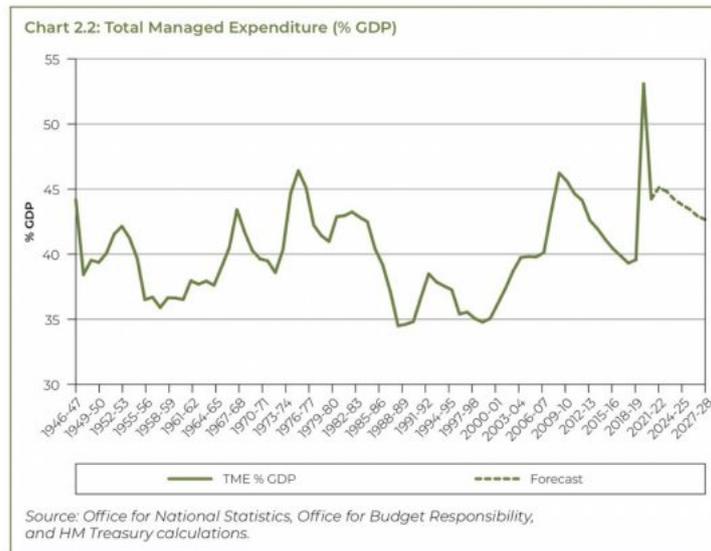

Published: January 13, 2026, 4:32 am

This is another Tweet, just posted:

Richard Murphy
@RichardJMurphy

If you want a single chart summary of the budget then this is it. It shows that government spending is going to fall as a percentage of GDP. That's not because growth is going to be so strong. It's going to be so small no one will notice it. It is, instead, because what the Tories are planning are further big spending cuts that Labour will have to respond to. Same old, same old Tories, always seeking to make life miserable for those who expense on the state, as most of us do.

So, the Tories are back on the austerity agenda with planned spending cuts that no one thinks are deliverable, and which are the real explanation for today's tax give away.