I must apologise to email subscribers to the blog who did not receive emails over the last few days. You should get this post as part of a mail tonight.

The reason for this failure baffled us until we realised that the blog had reached the limit of its subscription for email distribution. So, I got out the credit card and made the necessary payment, and we are now good until we hit 5,000 subscribers.

There are two important posts I would like to highlight that some who get the email might have missed.

One was last Saturday's post on the political economy of money and tax, which is long but addresses these key issues in a comprehensive manner.

The other, about which quite a lot of people have passed very favourable comment, is on the nature of the national debt. If you are going to read just one of the two this is the one to look at.
