My National article this morning:

Richard Murphy: Businesses want these four things – but Rachel Reeves is clueless

I GROANED when I heard Rachel Reeves say that she had gone to Davos to make clear that Labour were going to make the UK a good place to do business again. There were numerous reasons.

And, just in case you won't go there, the four things are:

- * A government committed to the rule of law, which will now take some effort to re-establish.
- * A level playing field, which means investment in HMRC so that cheats pay their taxes.
- * Investment in social and physical infrastructure that is crumbling before our eyes.
- * Reintegration with Europe.
