For those not aware of it, there is an opportunity to subscribe to a daily update email from this blog. Just fill in the form on the right-hand side of this post (unless you are on a phone or tablet, when it may well be below it).

I suddenly realised today (when there will be at least six posts) that only three are being included in the mailing. As a result, we have now changed that. Up to ten of the most recent posts can now be included in the mail, so nothing should be missed. I have never done that many in a day, as far as I recall.

That said, there is a further issue where a change to this mailing might be appropriate. Right now, it goes out at midnight. Some readers have asked if it could go out earlier. That seems quite a good idea to me, given I very rarely post anything in the evening. I am a lark, not an owl. So, a 7 pm mailing might be an alternative, and it will still be there for those who want to read it the following morning. To seek opinions on this, might those with an interest in the issue answer this poll?

Thank you.
