These are the lead paragraphs from an FT report this morning:

Rishi Sunak's Rwanda asylum bill is "fundamentally incompatible" with the UK's human rights obligations, a cross-party parliamentary committee has warned, as the legislation is set to undergo scrutiny in the House of Lords.

In a report that underscored the high stakes of the prime minister's bid to remove asylum seekers to Rwanda before the next general election, the Joint Committee on Human Rights said the bill flouted the principle of the universality of human rights and jeopardised the UK's reputation for respecting the rule of law.

The Tories will continue with the Bill nonetheless. That's why we know they are fascists. In the face of warnings, they are continuing to pursue policies that are racist and deny us all our human rights. No other interpretation of their political creed is really now possible given those facts.

But remember, when Labour could have voted to kill this Bill they did not. They, too, have questions to answer.
