As the Guardian reports this morning:

Thailand's election body has said it will seek the dissolution of a pro-reform party that won the most votes in last year's election, saying there is evidence the party "undermines the democratic system with the king as the head of state".

I can just imagine Michael Gove rubbing his hands in glee at the idea of doing something similar here. After all, voting anything but Tory has to be wrong by undermining the democratic system, doesn't it?
