

Is it beyond the wit of our politicians to make up thei...

Published: January 13, 2026, 8:33 am

As has been my habit in recent days, I put up a Twitter poll yesterday. In the light of developments in Gaza, the question that I ask was unsurprising, as was the reaction.

That being said, neither of the Conservative or Labour Parties are providing any real lead on this issue.

Rumour has it that legal opinion has been given to the government saying that arms exports should end, but they still have not acted.

But was legal opinion really needed to determine that?

And does Labour need to hide behind the fig leaf of demanding this opinion before saying that it thinks that all export licenses should be banned?

Is it beyond the wit of our politicians to make up their own minds without having to find excuses for their action? Seemingly, it is.