Prospect: Labour's £92bn prize

The Guardian is it the only outlet to have an article by me on the Taxing Wealth Report over the last day or so. So too has Prospect magazine.

The image shows the header of the Prospect magazine website. The word 'Prospect' is in a large, bold, black font. To its left is a menu icon (three horizontal lines) and the word 'Menu'. To its right are buttons for 'Log in' and 'Subscribe'. Below the main title are several navigation links: 'Politics', 'World', 'Ideas', 'Views', 'Culture', 'Latest issue', 'Podcasts', and 'Newsletters'. Underneath these links is a red horizontal bar with the word 'ECONOMICS' in white capital letters. The main title of the article, 'Labour's £92bn prize', is displayed in a large, bold, black font. Below the title is a brief summary in a smaller, italicized black font: 'There is a transformational amount of money waiting to be claimed by a government that will reform the tax system. Keir Starmer and Rachel Reeves should act'. At the bottom of the header, it says 'By Richard Murphy' and 'April 10, 2024'.

I think we can be sure that the message will have been heard by now.
