The Guardian has just published this:

The screenshot shows a Guardian article. On the left, there is a sidebar with the text 'Opinion Labour' at the top. Below it, the date and time 'Wed 10 Apr 2024 10:00 BST' are displayed. At the bottom of the sidebar is a 'Share' button with a small icon and the number '0'. The main content area on the right features the title 'More public spending is within Labour's grasp - here's how it could find an extra £90bn a year' in a large, bold font. Below the title is the author's name 'Richard Murphy' in a smaller, italicized font. Further down, there is a sub-headline 'Five simple policy ideas could generate billions for a Labour chancellor and end the threat of continued austerity'. At the bottom of the article preview, there is a small bio: 'Richard Murphy is professor of accounting practice at Sheffield University Management School and director of Tax Research LLP'.

Give it a read over there.
