This is my short video for this morning. In it, I argue that for all practical purposes, this election campaign is over. It's time to move on and face the dire reality of a Starmer / Reeves / Streeting government.

The transcript is:

Can we vote now, please?

Lots of people are saying that to me. They're fed up with this election campaign.

The Tories and Labour are slugging it out and making absolutely no difference with anything they're saying because the Tories are obviously out of ideas and Labour, if it has any, won't talk about them.

Nigel Farage is making an idiot of himself, and the other parties are making good points. But they're not getting the attention that they need and the headway that they desire.

So, most people have already decided who they're going to vote for.

Why do we have to suffer another fortnight or so of election campaigning before we actually go and put our cross in the box?

Let's get on with it. Let's move on into the world where we have a Labour government and we can start criticising them for their failures.
