

Politics is not engaging the public

I thought this data, just issued by Ipsos Mori, was interesting enough to share.

The lack of regard for the Tories is staggering, but the figures for Reform are almost as notable. Parties on the right-wing fringes of UK politics are clearly not popular right now.

That said, Labour only just about staggers into net popularity, with the Greens closest behind.

The idea that politics is not engaging with the British public is the winner here.

Given the importance of political issues, the idea that politics must do better is overwhelming. I cannot see this happening until neoliberalism is consigned to the bin.
