

Is the BBC aiding the far-right?

Published: January 13, 2026, 5:41 am

I posted this on Twitter moments ago:

Richard Murphy ✓
@RichardJMurphy

A simple question.

Why did the BBC ever think it appropriate to report that the suspect in the Southport killings was born in Cardiff to parents from Rwanda?

If he'd been born in Surrey to parents from Yorkshire, I am certain that they would not have pointed that out.

Are they trying to create, or even imply that there are, second-class British citizens?

This feels horribly like racism from the BBC, with the implication being that this group is made up of people who could be deported from the UK because they might have a claim to citizenship elsewhere. If that is what is happening, the BBC is supporting the far-right playbook.

An explanation is needed. Why is this apparent racism allowed from our state broadcaster?

8:05 AM · Jul 31, 2024

I am shocked that the BBC reported in this way.

An explanation is needed, and very urgently.