

Most days

Most days, I wake up wanting to write.

Most days, I can think of something I want to write about.

Today is not most days. The necessity of addressing Starmer's incompetence has got to me. I don't want to write more about him today. Or, come to that, anything else to do with his government that collectively appears to be intent on failure.

It's time to think, walk, snooze, breathe deep and birdwatch.

The government will still be there tomorrow. I'll talk about it again then.
