

Thinking time

I am working on ideas for several academic projects this week, some of which I am doing out of the office. A camera has travelled with me. This is early morning dew on a spider's web, magnified many times:

I was making notes in a bird hide, waiting for things to happen, and a robin joined me:

I enlarged the photo up to look at the detail:

There is no way I could have seen that even if the robin was only, maybe, two metres away.

And for the record, I was thinking about a chapter I am writing on risk and uncertainty for the Accounting Streams project. Sometimes these things progress best by taking them out to work on, especially with a robin for company.
