I wrote this on Twitter last night:

I knew Alex Salmond, enough to chat every few months, sometimes at length, and I enjoyed doing so. He, like all of us, was a flawed human being, but he gave his all to Scotland, and Scotland was better for it. RIP Alex. I'll miss you.

I could add more, but I am not inclined to do so.

News of Alex's death left me genuinely shocked and sad last night, after what had already been an emotional day clearing, with my family, the home of my late father and step-mother. It was a day for many memories. Alex's death added to that feeling.

Condolences to his family, friends and colleagues. They're going to have so much to go through.
