It was beautiful at the Wetlands and Wildlife Trust's Welney reserve this morning. This is the bridge over the Fenland 'drains' (or drainage canals) onto the reserve:

The reserve was looking good, with water levels much down from those of only a few weeks ago:

Highlights were marsh harrier, godwits, kingfisher, snipe, dunlin, cattle and great egret and many more.

The sky was playing tricks, though. That gave me the chance to take some photos of skeins of Canada geese. First was this:

Then, a little later, I saw another coming over and shot straight into the sun, not knowing what might come out:

I am sure if I learned to use Lightshop, these could be improved no end, but I like them anyway. These were taken on an iPhone.
