

The US is in for a very rough ride

Trump has lost his first nominated candidate for membership in the government that will take office with him on January 20 2025. Matt Gaetz has withdrawn his name from consideration for the office of attorney general, largely because of the scandals surrounding his conduct on which Congress was about to report when he resigned from that House to accept this nomination.

Trump must have known of those scandals and thought them unimportant.

We are aware that at least one other nominee faces serious charges of misconduct.

Trump is delivering what we expected. It is very clear that he does not care about compliance with the law or ethics.

The media has accounted for Gaetz. Maybe they will still hold Trump accountable, to some degree. But it is not going to be easy. The US is still in for a very rough ride.
