I am pleased to report that I was told yesterday that I will be appointed as Emeritus Professor of Accounting at Sheffield University Management School on my retirement from employment there on 28 February 2025, with the new role commencing the day after.

For those not familiar with this role, it is, in the words that the university used to me, awarded “in recognition of your most distinguished services and contribution” to the University. Subject to my complying with the conditions attached to the role, it is granted for life.

The expectation is that the post-holder will maintain academic associations with the University, and that is my intention, as well as that of my colleagues. The post is not remunerated and is not an employment.
