As The Observer reports this morning:

Ministers are resisting demands to rush through measures to block Elon Musk from handing millions to Nigel Farage, amid a growing clamour for an overhaul of Britain's political donation laws.

Of course, they're resisting the call.

They're too spineless to act.

Too witless to recognise the threat.

Too unprincipled to recognise what it is.

Too keen to suck up to wealth to ever say no to it.

Too indifferent to democracy to care about its future.

Too careless about the people of this country to bother.

Of course, they're resisting the call. They're so frightened of governing they don't even know it's addressed to them.
