After some debate between Thomas and myself over whether to make YouTube videos covering the Christmas period he persuaded me that we should.

His logic was quite compelling. A great many people will be very bored over the days to come and will be looking at their phones. He thought it was an ideal time to put out some videos. As a result, that is exactly what we will be doing.

Whilst there probably will not be many posts other than those relating to the day's video for the next couple of days, even that cannot be guaranteed. Whilst I have stopped other work until the New Year, and I'm more than happy to have done so, writing blogs and making videos just does not seem to fall into that category. They always seem much more like a hobby than work to me.

But if you don't want to read or watch, please don't bother. I am not expecting record views, but these days nothing on social media seems to work out the way that I expect.

Either way, thanks for your support. We appreciate it.
