I am well aware there is a movement now arguing we need to work four days a week.

I took Friday afternoon off last week, and it transformed the weekend into something much more valuable. I might have to try that again.

And because I knew this was my plan I did work hard to clear a lot of stuff to let it happen. I may not have increased my productivity, but I did concentrate on what was most important. That was of merit.

This experience is not a representative sample of anything. But it has made me wonder whether I do have better ways of organising my work available to me.
