

Labour's plans for growth are, as ever, focused on the ...

Published: January 14, 2026, 2:53 pm

As the Guardian reports this morning:

Rachel Reeves is unveiling plans to create "Europe's Silicon Valley" between Oxford and Cambridge as she stakes the government's success on kickstarting economic growth and putting more pounds in people's pockets.

So, yet more investment for south-east England then, and very little for anyone else in that case.

It's as if Labour is dedicated to the promotion of regional and actual inequality whilst alienating very large parts of England and the entireties of Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland

Political incompetence on this scale is hard to create. Starmer and Reeves are managing it.

How they think they have a hope of being re-elected in 2029 if this is their plan, heaven only knows - and I suspect it is sharing my despair.