My son, Thomas (or Tom, to everyone but his parents), has been my videographer for ten months now. I literally could not make the videos we put on this blog without him.

Over the last year, we have both been on a massive learning curve, learning vast amounts about making videos, the necessary tech, YouTube, and much more.

Now, Thomas is challenging me when it comes to photography (which is not hard, as I need to improve my skills a lot). He took his shot of Ely Cathedral earlier this week:

I like it. It's proved to be quite popular on the web already. Please do, however, note that this is the copyright of Thomas Murphy and may not be reproduced without his permission.

I do wonder what PSR might have to say.
