Discussing fiscal rules on Radio 4

By chance, given the subject of today's video, I was on Radio 4's programme 'The World Tonight' at 10.30 yesterday evening discussing fiscal rules.

The clip can be found 31.40 into the programme, by following this link.

I was up against Labour MP Dan Tomlinson, who was just at infant school when the history of these things began in 1997 and is now the government's 'growth champion', having previously been at the Resolution Foundation as a senior economist.

I have to say that everything he said was entirely predictable and added nothing to the sum of human knowledge as a result, but I may be biased about the merits of our relative contributions. I did not hold back on my opinions.
