I apologise for the fact that I am still not back from the weekend.

Chichester has been worth visiting. I liked this juxtaposition. That is, of course, the cathedral in the background.

This was fun:

The Chichester Canal provided the best birding. This heron was hoping not to be spotted by his or her inevitable victims:

A great tit was pretending to be a reed bunting:

This reed warbler decided to let itself be photographed. They are usually a nightmare to see, let alone get a shot of. The whole canal was alive with their song. Cettis and sedge warblers were also around:

And at the Chichester Harbour marina, a cormorant and a black-headed gull ignored the ridiculous boats on display all around.
