

Is the truth about Trump the biggest political unknown ...

As the New York Times reports in an email this morning:

During a fraught White House meeting with a stunned President Cyril Ramaphosa of South Africa, President Trump showed a video and waved around printouts of what he said was evidence of racial persecution of white South Africans, including killings.

Quite appropriately, President Ramaphosa fought back, including by apologising for not having a plane to offer the USA.

There is no evidence of these killings.

Meanwhile, in the next item in the same email, the NYT reports:

Three days after Israel said it had eased its blockade of Gaza to let aid trucks in, very little — if any — of the urgently needed food, fuel and medicine appeared to have reached Palestinians.

A panel of U.N.-backed experts warned this month that Gazans were at “critical risk of famine,” with tens of thousands of children facing acute malnutrition. Israel dismissed the report.

Trump is not mentioning it. He is still, very clearly, Netanyahu's best friend.

We have a bigot, a racist, a supporter of genocide, and a person dedicated to ending the rule of law in the White House.

When are the politicians of the world going to say that, or is this the biggest unknown known of all, the ultimate truth that they cannot bring themselves to address?
