I got this note through yesterday from William Thomson, who co-runs something called Scotonomics, for whom I have recorded on a number of occasions, because they run an excellent podcast series.

Understanding the importance of issuing your own currency in an independent Scotland

In this unique short series of events (Glasgow 11th July and Cardiff 18th July) Scotonomics and Yes Cymru have come together to put on a fantastic event to focus on the importance of our independent nations issuing their own currency: on day one of independence.

Glasgow 11th July 6 pm to 9 pm
Cardiff 18th July 6 pm to 9 pm

Programme:

17.00 (Optional pre event workshop) – Principles of Modern Monetary Theory
17.45 Doors and refreshments
18.00 Welcome and the State We Are In – An economic summary of the United Kingdom
18.30 The Economic Narrative of Independence
19.15 Facilitated group discussion on the vision for independence
19.45 Break with refreshments
20.00 Monetary Sovereignty
20.30 How an understanding of Modern Monetary Theory (MMT) support independence
21.00 Close

The two events listed here look really good, but I should add that I'm not promoting them because I will be in attendance. Right now, I am focusing on video production and book writing, and both require a routine that travel severely disrupts.

That said, if you're interested in these events, take a look at this link.
