

Funding the Future

We are not overwhelmed by migrants

Published: January 13, 2026, 5:02 am

I thought this was worth sharing, from BueSky:

Best for Britain @bestforbritain.bsky.social · 15h

An important sense-check on migration from @financialtimes.com

Ignore the convulsing commentators of the Mail & Telegraph.

The UK is about average in the OECD and in line with its peer countries when it comes to the proportion of foreign-born people living in the country.

FINANCIAL TIMES

Source: Migration Observatory analysis of OECD, international migration database: ALT

4

90

183

The idea that there is anything exceptional about the number of people living in the UK who were not born here is quite absurd.

Most successful countries have many more people born outside their countries living in them.

Migration is normal, healthy, and wealth-generating.

So what are we making a fuss about? Or is it really that the Cult of Nigel really is all about racism?