

Delivering missiles for 'Daddy'

As I posted on social media last night:

£1.2 billion for bombers, paid for by cuts for disabled people

That's Labour's choice, not mine

Funding the Future

As The Guardian noted:

The UK is to substantially expand its nuclear deterrent by buying a squadron of American-made fighter jets that are capable of delivering US tactical warheads that are likely to be stored on British soil.

They added:

The announcement by Keir Starmer at the Nato summit marks the most significant change in Britain's nuclear posture since the end of the cold war, with US bombs set to return to the UK, and is bound to provoke alarm among arms control experts and campaigners.

And crucially, they noted this:

Under the plan, the UK will buy 12 of the F-35A jets, which are capable of carrying conventional munitions and also the US B61-12 gravity bomb, a variant of which has the explosive power of more than three times the weapon dropped on Hiroshima.

Link those paragraphs together, and what is clear is that we're paying £1.2 billion for the privilege of acting as couriers for US nuclear weapons.

We won't control them.

We can't fire them.

We just deliver them.

I then wrote this as a result:

Labour: turning wheelchairs into warheads to keep 'Daddy' Trump

And if you don't get that message, the Dutch NATO General secretary referred to Trump as Daddy yesterday in one of the most sickening moments in international 'diplomacy' ever.
