The Telegraph has this headline in an email this afternoon:

Sir Keir Starmer has condemned the “appalling hate speech” against Israeli soldiers used by rap group Bob Vylan at Glastonbury.

The Prime Minister said the BBC had questions to answer over its live broadcast of the duo’s performance on Saturday.

I am not in any way condoning what Vylan said, but Starmer gave his 'island of strangers' speech recently and has never once apologised for actively supporting a government pursuing genocide. I suggest he needs to get his own act in order before jumping on the BBC, which was, no doubt, caught by surprise by what was said. Starmer acted with prior forethought.
