Charlie Kirk, the founder of Turning Point, has been assassinated in Utah, ISA.

I don't like what Turning Point has to say.

I don't like how it says it.

But nothing justifies the assassination of political opponents.

And nothing justifies the portrayal of a lone assassin, as would appear to inevitably be the case here, as a representative of a cause.

Violence of any sort has no place in politics or policy.

Nor does hate, even when fear is unavoidable (and in the modern political environment, that is the case).

I would hope for considerable political responsibility at this time, even as I fear it is not being delivered.

We all have a right to live. What is so hard to understand about that?
