

Roundabouts

I like this, from Brian Bilston:

English Roundabouts

They're making the roundabouts great again
by painting the flag of St George
to keep our circular road systems safe
from the dark, satanic hordes.

What do they want? Patriotic junctions!
When do they want them? Before it's too late.
Good old-fashioned English roundabouts,
as decreed by Alfred the Great.

Behold the sacred intersection,
this blessed plot, this septic isle.
English roundabouts for English people,
draped in red and white and bile.

St George is cross, as well he may be – whipped-up hate, he's seen before.
Give way to the right, the road signs rage,
and the far right most of all.

Brian Bilston

Some in poetry seem to look down on Brian Bilston's work. I don't, and have a couple of his collections. This is an example of why that is the case.
