

Rachel Reeves: time to go

Published: January 13, 2026, 8:58 am

Throughout the weekend, I kept asking myself whether I should write a blog post about Rachel Reeves misrepresenting the economic background to her Budget, but then I asked myself: why?

The mainstream media has covered this issue.

Nobody now expects Rachel Reeves to tell the truth.

The fact that she dissembled (at best) to support her spreadsheet-balancing exercise is not really a surprise to anyone.

And no one expects her to ever have another go at presenting a Budget, because she and Keir Starmer are so obviously now failing leaders of the Labour Party, let alone the country.

So, having spent a lot of time over the last few weeks discussing all her many and miserable failings, I have decided that there is no point in documenting in detail yet another of them. Let's just agree: she's failed, and it's time for her to go.
