This is the transcript:

A century ago, the Irish polymath and playwright George Bernard Shaw said that "Reasonable people bend themselves to the ways of the world, whilst," he added, "unreasonable people try to bend the world to their ways."

We are in this world, at this point in time, desperately short of unreasonable people, because as George Bernard Shaw made clear, all progress is dependent upon their existence, because they are the people who call out what is wrong and demand change.

The world is in a very bad place right now.

We need change.

We desperately need unreasonable people, and our politicians appear to be totally compliant.

This is the moment where we must be looking elsewhere for the political leadership we need, and I hope you will do that because our conventional leaders are failing us badly.
