I noted our event in Cambridge on 28 February here yesterday.

We have now also issued this invitation on YouTube:

This video is unusual for us because I'm making a specific invitation to you. Please join us at the Funding the Future Conference in Cambridge on the 28th of February.

Funding the Future is more than a blog or a channel these days. It is about how we organise society, and that involves people, including you.

We've mainly been about social media to date, but we also talk to people, we meet with people, and we think with other people, and that's precisely what we want to do at our conference on the 28th of February in the Hilton Hotel in Central Cambridge, to which we're inviting you.

The event is being deliberately structured so that you have a chance to meet us, other people who are interested in the topics about which you're concerned, with plenty of opportunity to talk, and to also ask questions.

The event starts at 12:30, so you should have plenty of time to get to Cambridge. It finishes at 05:00, so you should have time to get home, and there will be three sessions, and the goals are threefold.

First of all, we want to talk about what is going on in the world. We want to talk about care as if it were economics that is relational and not virtual. We want to, therefore, have this chance to actually meet and understand each other.

Secondly, we want to talk about economics that make sense. So we're going to have a session on learning about the bond market, which is important because that is one of the areas where there's particular confusion amongst many people who watch my channel, and they want to know what this is about. So we thought we'd focus on that, but of course, with an opportunity to ask questions.

And thirdly, we're going to have a question-and-answer session. That is about creating understanding. You could ask anything within reason. If it's too long, we might reserve the right to make a video about it instead of spending too long at the meeting on a particular topic, but the point is this. Bring your questions with you. Ask us about something technical. Ask us about something to do with politics. Ask us about where you think the country will be in five years' time. Ask us if you like about how we make our videos and why we are motivated to do so. The point is, the floor will be yours.

So, please come along on 28th February. Talk to us. Let's build something real and not just digital. Learn, challenge and connect, that's what this event is about because the future will not fund itself.
