Finding your way around the blog

A question came up this morning in the comments about how to find the 'economic questions' series on this blog.

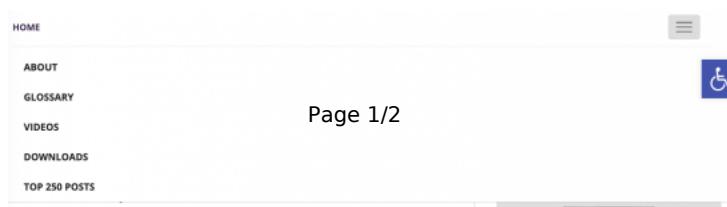

It occurred to me that not all readers will know how to navigate this blog.

One way to do it is to use the search function. That should be in the top-right corner of a browser. It is also in the right-hand column on a browser:

It will be below the posts on a phone.

The three lines at the top right-hand corner above are also navigation tools, opening these menus:

This is one way to get to the glossary. The other is just to click on any word that has a low-highlight link in it.

And, then also note the word 'categories' in the bottom left corner of the top image. Click on that, and all entries on this blog are categorised under about 80 headings, and there is one for 'economic questions'. You will then find all the entries in the series come up. I hope that helps.

Finally, note the disabled logo. That lets anyone format how they view the blog, and I find that really useful sometimes.
