

Is the monarchy over?

Published: February 5, 2026, 7:30 am

---

I have already asked this morning whether Keir Starmer's career is over as a consequence of the Epstein scandal. So let me ask another question that appears to require an answer, which is, can the monarchy survive the Epstein scandal?

We learned more about the behaviour of the royal family yesterday:

- * Andrew Montbatten-Windsor (AMW) was bundled out of Windsor during the night and sent into exile in Sandringham after:
  - * More revelations about his behaviour with young women.
- * His defiant ride through Great Park in Windsor on Tuesday.

- * The King revealed his own lack of judgment in letting AMW stay in Windsor before this move was forced on him. He should have been moved out many months, if not years, ago.
- * He shows the same lack of judgment now by letting AMW move to Sandringham under royal protection with an income provided by the royal family.
- * The revelations about AMW can only get worse. There will be more to come. The damage to the royal family can only get worse.

And let me note:

- * There has been no apparent investigation of AMW's behaviour by the King or his staff, of which we have been made aware, or the findings of which have been made public, indicating either:
  - * A curious lack of curiosity on his part.
  - * A desire to cover matters up.
  - * A wish to hide the late Queen's involvement in all this, given that she provided the £12 million settlement AMW paid with regard to this matter.

- * A desire to maintain the pretence that there is a perfect "royal family", which we can very clearly see is utter nonsense.
- * All of this suggests that the King is revealing incompetence on this issue to a degree that matches that of Keir Starmer's.
- * Charles has no viable successor. The monarchy is an institution, the eugenic foundation of which is repugnant and which can only have contributed to the attitude of AWM (and maybe others within it) that there are "disposable people" who were available to be exploited.

I think the Labour Party is over. It has been revealed to be rotten to the core. I think the same of the monarchy too.

The royal family includes rotten people. That is now clear to absolutely anyone. There is nothing special about them. There is nothing that should now give the Mountbatten Windsors a supposedly God-given, legally endowed, or customary right to act as head of state of this country or of some others within the Commonwealth of Nations. They're just a bunch of ultra-privileged people who have exploited their position and other people for personal gain and gratification. That's been rumbled now. It's time for them to go.

How long will that take? Longer than it will take for Starmer to go, but watch this space.