I was at Welney yesterday with both Jacqueline and Tom, our son and our videographer.

I did not take a camera. He did. These are his shots. This is a female kestrel, eying the scene:

It was not long before she was in action, like this:

And then this:

More sedately, there is this Whooper swan cygnet, coming in to land:

I was out in Ely in the afternoon. These are iPhone shots. First, the later afternoon sun over the site of Ely Castle (long gone, but near the Cathedral):

And then, my swan of the day, a mute swan on the Great Ouse. The reflection is of the railings of the bridge above it. I concentrated on them. My regret is that I cut off the reflection of the swan's head. You live and learn when taking photos. There is always next time to try to get it right:
