

Time to end the House of Windsor

The Telegraph has reported, not very long ago:

Police arrive at Andrew Mountbatten-Windsor's home

Police have arrived at Andrew Mountbatten-Windsor's home in Sandringham.

Six unmarked police cars and around eight plain clothed officers, with one carrying a police-issue laptop, were seen arriving at Wood Farm on the Sandringham estate just after 8am.

The cover-up has to end.

And the role of the late Queen in making sure it happened has also to be questioned.

And as I wrote those words, I noticed this from the BBC:

Andrew Mountbatten-Windsor arrested and in custody on suspicion of misconduct in public office

The time has come to pull this whole, rotten, eugenically justified edifice of privilege down and replace it with:

- * A constitution
- * An end to monarchy

- * An end to the honours system
- * An elected head of state
- * An elected, regionally representative Senate
- * A House of Commons elected by proportional representation
- * State-funded political parties
- * A ban on corporate donations to any party and strict donation limits from individuals
- * Proper regulation of think tanks and lobbyists
- * Proper controls on the media

Never again should the right to abuse by those with privilege be granted by the state.
