As The Guardian notes this morning:

UK GDP rose by 0.5% in February, new data from the Office for National Statistics shows. That's much stronger than the 0.1% growth the City had expected.

The ONS reports that services and production both grew by 0.5%, and construction grew by 1.0% in February.

January's GDP data has been revised up too - to show 0.1% growth, rather than stagnation.

That won't last for long is all I need to say.

Rachel Reeves should not open the bubbly on her way home from Washington.
