In a move that can surprise no one, oil prices are up this morning. This data is from Trading Economics:

All the forecasts that I have made about massive economic disruption resulting from the US/Israeli assault on Iran remain in place. The risks of recession or depression and of major shortages in the supply of resources essential for life itself, including food, remain relevant.

The risks of extreme poverty, and even resulting death, are real in the UK and right across the world.

I was pleased that over the weekend, some awareness of this appears to be creeping into our media. Action to address the consequences is absolutely essential, and I will keep saying so until it happens.
