

Ottering

I said I would go birdwatching yesterday. And I did. There are four types of geese in this photograph: greylag, Canada, punk-footed and Brent (much the smallest). There are also ruff, lapwing, black-tailed godwit and snipe, plus a good variety of ducks like mallard, shoveler, gadwall and teal.

But the best sighting of the morning was a mammal. This otter put in an appearance:

That was a real, and rare, treat at WWT Welney, which is our regular Saturday haunt.

And then in the afternoon I was in Ely, thinking about how to write an infographic on money, which may well be the hardest I might ever need to tackle.
