Funding the Future

Autumn

Published: October 13, 2026, 6:56 am

There is no reason to post this photo that I took at WWT Welney on Sunday, except to put up something that is not about doom and gloom.

Our economy is being immeasurably harmed by economic policy designed to reduce the well-being of most people.

But there are still moments of joy.

These teasels provided one.

So did the family of whooper swans I saw shortly afterwards, but failed to photograph successfully.

They brought four cygnets with them and were the first returnees from Iceland with young this autumn.

It is staggering that these birds can fly continuously for about 24 hours when just a few months old, covering about 1,200 miles in the process, but their arrival makes autumn feel a little more special.

If only everyone might see the hope in migration.